ABSTRACT

This work reports the synthesis of new fatty acid amides from C16:0, 18:0, 18:1, 18:1 (OH), and 18:2 fatty acids families with cyclic and acyclic amines and demonstrate for the first time the activity of these compounds as antituberculosis agents against Mycobacterium tuberculosis H<sub>37</sub>Rv, M. tuberculosis rifampicin resistance (ATCC 35338), and M. tuberculosis isoniazid resistance (ATCC 35422). The fatty acid amides derivative from ricinoleic acid were the most potent one among a series of tested compounds, with a MIC 6.25 µg/ml for resistance strains.

Mycobacterium tuberculosis causes more human deaths than any other single infectious organism with an estimated eight million new tuberculosis (TB) cases and two million fatalities each year.<sup>1</sup> Although currently available treatment regimens can cure most cases susceptible to drugs, factors such as long lead times of therapy, the need for multidrug, resistance emergence, co-infection with HIV and persistent strains, requires the urgent need to develop new drugs against TB.<sup>2</sup> In particular, strains resistant to two most important drugs, isoniazid (INH) and rifampicin (RMP), can cause serious repercussions in the epidemiology and disease control.<sup>3</sup> INH is a prodrug that requires processing by the bacterial catalase-peroxidase to become active. Once activated, it inhibits the biosynthesis of mycolic acids, which are essential components of the mycobacterial cell wall. This drug is bactericidal against metabolically active bacilli and bacteriostatic against resting bacilli. Resistance to INH is mostly associated with mutations or deletions in katC; other mutations related with INH resistance occur in the coding region of inhA gene (or its promoter),<sup>4</sup> however, some INH resistant strains do not present any alteration in these loci. For these strains, it was been postulated that INH resistance could be due to mutations in an unknown genes, permeability decrease or efflux increase.<sup>5</sup> A great variety of studies have been performed to resolve the resistance and toxicity of INH, wherein amphiphilic prodrugs are of interest because they are prone to penetrate into bacterial cells.<sup>6</sup>

The fatty acids amides have been considered as a new family of biologically lipids by different biochemical and pharmacological studies,<sup>7</sup> because it have industrial applications<sup>8</sup> and important biological activities.<sup>9</sup> Research about these compounds has been shown to be involved in many organ systems, such immune, energy balance, food intake, metabolic homeostasis, cardiovascular, depressive effects, fertility, pain, and neuroprotection.<sup>10–12</sup> The fatty acid amides may also have a role in cancer biology because of its effects on cell proliferation.<sup>13–14</sup> The identification of two biologically active fatty acid amides, N-arachidonyl ethanolamide (anandamide)<sup>15</sup> and cis-oleamide (c-OA),<sup>16</sup> the best-known and best-understood members of a much larger family (Fig. 1), stimulated researches for isolation, characterization, and synthesis of
